

QUARTERLY REVIEW

Institutional International Disciplined Equity Fund

As of September 30, 2019

PORTFOLIO HIGHLIGHTS

The portfolio outperformed the MSCI EAFE (Europe, Australasia, Far East) Index Net for the three-month period ended September 30, 2019.

Relative performance drivers:

- Stock selection in consumer discretionary contributed.
- Stock selection in materials detracted
- Regionally, stock selection in developed Europe benefited relative results.

Additional highlights:

- The portfolio remains focused on managing downside risk amid the uncertain near-term environment for international equities. Valuations continue to dictate position sizes, and we believe balance and risk management are key.
- We rely on our independent global research platform and bottom-up stock selection process to help uncover compelling opportunities. Our emphasis is on finding mispriced, high-quality stocks with an emphasis on strong fundamentals and seasoned management teams.

PERFORMANCE REVIEW

International Stock Markets Decline in a Volatile Quarter

Stocks in developed international markets fell in the third quarter. Within the MSCI EAFE Index, developed European stock markets posted mixed performance. Stocks in Germany fell due to poor manufacturing data that suggested that Europe's largest economy was slipping into recession. UK shares also declined due, in part, to Brexit uncertainty.

Most developed Asian markets fell, especially Hong Kong, where stocks plunged amid civil unrest. Japanese shares rose, however, despite disappointing economic data. Data released in September showed that exports had declined for nine consecutive months, due to weakness in the global economy and the prolonged U.S.-China trade dispute. Stocks in emerging equity markets underperformed developed markets, despite central bank easing in several countries. In Asia, most markets declined, but shares in Taiwan bucked the negative trend.

Sector performance in the MSCI EAFE Index was mixed. Health care, utilities, and consumer staples recorded gains, while the energy, materials, and financials sectors posted losses.

Stock Selection in Consumer Discretionary Contributed

The consumer discretionary sector was the portfolio's best relative performance contributor, led by strong stock selection, particularly in the textiles, apparel, and luxury goods industry.

- Asics is one of the world's leading athletic brands with a focus on performance running shoes. The company has been through a challenging period due to a sudden shift away from high-performance running shoes. Organizational and brand changes this year started to bear fruit, revenues turned higher in the second quarter, and profit margins are expected to rise. We think the company should benefit from excitement around the 2020 Olympics in Tokyo. The company delivered good second-quarter results, coupled with a surprise buyback announcement and a dividend hike.
- Grandvision is a Dutch optical product retailer that operates on a global basis, with a significant presence in western Europe. Over the quarter, French eyewear manufacturer EssilorLuxottica held talks with HAL Trust, a majority shareholder in Grandvision, to acquire the business. The deal was well received by the market, and we benefited from strong contributions in Grandvision and EssilorLuxottica over the period.

Holdings in Financials Aided Relative Results

Within financials, stock selection contributed to relative performance.

- Power Corporation of Canada, an international banking group with operations in Asia, Africa, and the Middle East, generated a solid relative performance contribution. The company has a unique corporate banking franchise in emerging markets, which has a large overlap with China's One Belt Road initiative. Strong quarterly results confirmed our belief that management is effectively focusing on costs. Additionally, the company recently announced a USD $1 billion share buyback as a result of the firm being able to settle U.S. and UK regulatory fines. This should allow further focus on cost containment and improving the balance sheet.

- HAL Trust, a Dutch investment company with a significant holding in Grandvision, generated a strong performance contribution over the quarter. As mentioned above, the deal by EssilorLuxottica to take ownership of Grandvision was well received by the market and benefited HAL as it freed up cash to invest in new opportunities.
- Switzerland-based Zurich Insurance Group posted solid third-quarter gains. It is a global insurer that generates earnings from its dominant non-life (global corporate, North American commercial, and European retail) business lines as well as traditional life insurance. We like the company for its steady cash flow from fees and added its shares for their turnaround potential. We believe the company will be successful in executing its three-year restructuring plan.

Stock Selection in Materials Detracted

Although our underweight allocation to the materials sector benefited relative results, stock selection in the containers and packaging industry was a significant detractor.

- Amcor Plc, the world's largest packaging company, with 300 plants operating in 42 countries, was among the portfolio's largest detractors in the period. The company is focused on plastics packaging with major operations in the U.S. and Europe, and emerging markets account for approximately 30% of revenues. We view the company's recent weakness as temporary. Rising raw materials cost should be passed through to customers with a time lag and North American beverage profits have declined due to slower volumes. Additionally, the company announced a recent acquisition that will likely hurt near-term return targets. However, we remain convinced that the deal will be long-term accretive and that the synergies and execution risks are manageable.

Stock Selection in Developed Europe Powered Returns

Stock selection in developed Europe was the best regional contributor to relative performance.

- Grandvision (mentioned earlier), a Netherlands-based global leader in optical retailing with over 7,000 stores across Europe, was the strongest contributor in developed Europe.
- We took some profits off the table in Vodafone, Europe's largest mobile operator. The UK-based company also has significant operations in India, South Africa, and Turkey. Investors have started to appreciate the improving revenue trend and longer-term revenue and free cash flow growth potential. We believe the stock is still undervalued and the company can generate good returns for the foreseeable future.

Stock selection in Japan benefited from key positions.

- We built a large position in Otsuka Holdings, a Japanese pharmaceutical company. We believe Otsuka should be able to generate durable growth now that it has put the patent expiry for its bipolar treatment, Abilify, behind it. New product platforms, including a monthly dose version of Abilify, should drive long-term growth, while positive trial results for treating Alzheimer's could lead to significant value creation given the size of that potential market. The stock had pulled back in January following a noncash impairment charge, offering us a good opportunity to own this company.

On the negative side, we also held a few significant detractors in developed Europe.

- The portfolio's largest detractor was Danish pharmaceutical holding H. Lundbeck, which has several neurology and psychiatric products. The recent weakness has been caused by investor concern about upcoming patent cliffs for certain products. We used the weakness to add to our position, because we believe that this high-quality company has a strong balance sheet and solid management team. In our view, the company is in a strong position to generate long-term growth as it refills its product pipeline.

PORTFOLIO POSITIONING AND ACTIVITY

Our investment process is focused on using fundamental research to identify the most compelling, highest-conviction companies trading at significant discounts to fair value, rather than using regional, country, or sector targets. We are style agnostic, but we look for companies that have a favorable combination of strong fundamentals, free cash flow generation, and attractive absolute valuation. Changes to sector weights are almost entirely the result of our stock-specific decisions. We are mindful of broader macroeconomic trends and how they affect the environment and prospects of our chosen portfolio holdings, but we ultimately build this portfolio from the bottom up. Over the quarter, our largest purchases were in financials and real estate, while the largest sales were in the consumer discretionary and consumer staples sectors.

Financials

- We found the prospects for UBS Group compelling and initiated a sizable position. UBS is a wealth management, investment banking, and asset management firm. The company provides a variety of financial services to individuals, institutions, corporations, governments, and financial intermediaries around the world. We took the opportunity to add the stock on weakness, which was due to broader industry trends rather than fundamentals.
- Danske Bank is the largest financial services provider in Denmark with a substantial market share in loans and deposits. It is also one of the largest life insurance providers and investment bank/asset managers in Denmark. We believe the company is undervalued, based on the fundamentals, following several negative news flows. We feel the shares offer a solid growth opportunity at a reasonable price.

Real Estate

- We added a new position in Great Portland Estates, a UK real estate management and development company with an excellent management team and one of the strongest capital allocation track records in the sector. The company creates value through the redevelopment and repositioning of below-grade office assets in supply constrained markets. We believe that rents in the company's major markets are improving, which should lead to improving returns and a possible re-rating of the stock. We were able to add a position at an attractive price after the stock was pushed down by macro trends relating to Brexit.

Consumer Discretionary

- Net selling in consumer discretionary switched the portfolio to an underweight position during the quarter. We exited our position in Grandvision and locked in some profits from Asics and EssilorLuxottica.

Consumer Staples

- We reduced our overweight position in consumer staples over the quarter. The overweight sector allocation detracted but was entirely offset by good stock selection. We eliminated three positions during the quarter. We sold the remainder of our Unilever stake, locked in a solid gain on British American Tobacco, and moved on from our holding in personal care company Essity.

MANAGER'S OUTLOOK

The risks to economic growth, most notably the second derivative of decelerating growth and the end of synchronized global growth, continue to concern us. As third-quarter earnings reporting begins, we expect cyclical stocks in non-U.S. markets to disappoint investors. In Europe, we believe purchasing managers' indexes (PMIs) may be approaching the bottom, whereas U.S. PMIs have been more resilient. We appear to be approaching an inflection point. Volatility is likely to create opportunities to buy high-quality companies at lower valuations. We have seen value-oriented names in industrials and banking start to pick up, and we could see this continue. We remain sellers on strength in areas such as European consumer staples, where we see premium prices for what we consider to be the stable, high-quality names.

The portfolio continues to be positioned with a focus on managing downside risk amid the uncertain near-term environment for international equities, while also opportunistically taking on cyclical risk where appropriate. We have lowered our position in precious metals, taking profits as it has become a consensus trade across the market. We remain underweight in the banking segment, although we have established new positions where we have found stocks at compelling valuations. Elsewhere in financials, we have adjusted our holdings in financial conglomerates, sticking with those that manage profitable, high-return global businesses. We continue to manage the portfolio in a highly disciplined manner and, as such, have looked to take profits when companies reach our estimation of fair value.

As always, we are focused on building the portfolio from the bottom up at the stock level while remaining aware of the top-down influences on the companies we own. In Europe, we are hearing more concerns about the effectiveness of ongoing monetary policy as the efficacy of continued quantitative easing is questioned. There appears to be growing demand for increased utilization of fiscal policy, which would need to be led by Germany. As a result of this, we would expect to see the yield curve to steepen and a rally in cyclical names. Japan, an exports-driven market, is dependent on global growth. While we maintain a good balance of names, our Japanese holdings tend to be somewhat defensive in nature. We let valuations dictate position sizes and believe balance and risk management are key.
