MARKET COMMENTARY

Major U.S. stock indexes advanced in September, as some conciliatory trade-related gestures from U.S. and Chinese officials helped ease tensions. As measured by various Russell indexes, value stocks outperformed growth shares across all market capitalizations. Within the S&P 500 Index, financials outperformed, helped by a rise in longer-term interest rates. Utilities and energy were also strong. The health care sector recorded a modest decline.

The trade dispute between the U.S. and China remained at center stage for much of the month. The S&P 500 Index recorded its best daily gain on September 5, after news broke that Chinese and U.S. negotiators were preparing to meet in Washington in early October. A series of conciliatory gestures from both sides further supported sentiment. Mixed signals on trade caused some volatility late in the month, but investors appeared to remain optimistic toward the prospect of resumed trade negotiations in October. Monetary policy expectations were also a major driver of market sentiment, as the Federal Reserve reduced short-term interest rates at its mid-month meeting, while other central banks around the world took measures to stimulate economic growth. The U.S. equity market seemed largely unaffected by the late-month opening of a House of Representatives impeachment inquiry regarding President Donald Trump's alleged pressuring of Ukraine's leader.

Despite signs of weakness, particularly in the manufacturing sector, we don't think it is likely that the U.S. economy will fall into a recession in the coming months. Importantly, no major signs of excess have emerged, as was dramatically the case with the housing bubble on the eve of the "Great Recession" a decade ago. Indeed, consumer finances are generally in solid shape, and corporate debt levels remain manageable. Nevertheless, selectivity will be key for investors in a slowing growth environment. Earnings gains are likely to be harder to come by as exporters wrestle with trade tensions and weakness in many overseas economies.

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. Numbers may not total due to rounding; all other numbers are percentages. Analysis represents the total performance of the portfolio as calculated by the FactSet attribution model and is inclusive of other assets that will not receive a classification assignment in the detailed structure shown. Returns will not match official T. Rowe Price performance because FactSet uses different exchange rate sources and does not capture intra-day trading. Performance for each security is obtained in the local currency and, if necessary, is converted using an exchange rate determined by an independent third party. Definitions

Active Share is a holdings based measure of active management representing the percentage of a portfolio's holdings that differ from those in its benchmark. Compared to tracking error, which measures the standard deviation of the difference in a manager's returns versus the Benchmark returns, Active Share allows investors to get a clearer understanding of what a manager is doing to drive performance, rather than drawing conclusions from observed returns. The greater the difference between the asset composition of a product and its benchmark, the greater the active share is.
